

April 27, 2021

Lack of sleep in middle age may increase dementia risk

At a Glance

- People who slept six hours or less per night in their 50s and 60s were more likely to develop dementia later in life.
- The findings suggest that inadequate sleep duration could increase dementia risk and emphasize the importance of good sleep habits.